Working here, I realize how much the community buys into everything and they're all about the sports the academics. They're all about making sure everyone is good and they support each other and I've seen that with a couple of events here at the school. But at the high school, everyone is so friendly and, off the bat, that's just what jumps out to me, how much support, when I came in, I came in during a tough situation and I wanted to be the best teacher that I could be and supportive for my students and of my coworkers and really They were just as supportive for me even though I felt like maybe you should've been all the way around and they were making sure that I was good—the students, the parents, they all reach out they're all really engaged and just really friendly. So off the bat, community is like the number one thing I think about and I really like that and I like to be a part of it hopefully permanently one day myself.
